

Lesson Design Work Groups

Now running in phase/key stage-cohorts or with a textbook focus

These Work Groups will equip you to identify and understand the key features involved in designing lessons in a Teaching for Mastery context, see them in practice, and create materials to use in your class/school.

Across three days, participants will have an opportunity to observe Mastery Specialist Teachers, co-create materials and then develop practice back in school.

Who is this for?

Work Groups are aimed at schools that were part of the London SW Maths Hub's Teaching for Mastery Work Groups last year. Participating teachers will be other than those who were lead participants. Expectations of participants and their schools

Participants will be expected to

- Attend all 3 Work Group sessions.
- In between sessions, develop their own practice around lesson design, work closely with their co-participant and keep a reflective journal.
- Contribute to the national evaluation process through a short survey after the Work Group has finished.

Great feedback from last year's project includes:

"I have become a lot more confident understanding mastery. Our whole lesson structure has changed and I feel like a completely different maths teacher."
